

Editors' Association of Canada/Association canadienne des réviseurs Conflict of Interest Policy

Effective date: June 2021

Policy purpose

The purpose of this policy is to ensure that members of the Editors' Association of Canada/Association canadienne des réviseurs avoid any actual or perceived conflict of interest between their private interests and association responsibilities.

Policy statement

The Editors' Association of Canada (Editors Canada) respects the principles of conflict of interest and is committed to being open and transparent in all its activities.

Definitions used within this policy

Conflict of interest exists where the activities of association members advance their own interests (or the interests of others with whom they have a familial, personal or business relationship) in a way that may be detrimental or potentially harmful to the normal operations, integrity or aims and objectives of the association.

Applicability

This policy applies to activities at the national, branch and twig levels of the association.

The policy applies to conflict of interest that occurs when members

- participate in association services, programs or environments, or
- act (or claim to act) as representatives of the association.

The policy is not intended to be used when the conflict of interest may be of an illegal nature.

Responsibility

Members of the national executive council, branch executive or committees must declare a conflict of interest on an issue before the council, executive or committee, and any member declaring such a conflict of interest should refrain from voting on the issue. Twig co-chairs should do likewise with their fellow twig chairs.

Association volunteers should declare any conflict of interest between their private interest and association responsibilities.

Editors Canada may apply the association's Bylaw No. 1 (2014), section 2.05 Discipline of Members, in cases where this policy is violated.
