

Editors' Association of Canada/Association canadienne des réviseurs
Affiliate Policy
Effective date: August 2014

Policy Purpose

The purpose of this policy is to define affiliates of the Editors' Association of Canada/Association canadienne des réviseurs.

Policy Statement

It is the policy of the Editors' Association of Canada to define affiliates in a way that provides benefit to affiliates and to the association.

Applicability

This policy applies to affiliates of the Editors' Association of Canada.

Affiliates are organizations, associations or individuals who share interests with the Editors' Association of Canada but either do not want or are not eligible for full membership. In exchange for a fee, they receive access to bundles of specific Editors' Association of Canada benefits, services and/or discounts.

Affiliates do not have the rights or responsibilities of Editors' Association of Canada members and they do not receive most member benefits. The items they are entitled to receive are described in the document Affiliates Procedures.

Types of affiliates include

- educational partners, such as academic institutions that deliver professional development to editing students
- associations where the constituents may share an interest in editing with Editors' Association of Canada members
- organizations that employ editors
- students working towards a career in editing and editing-related areas
- individuals who share an interest in the association without becoming members (defined as "friends")

Responsibility

The national office is responsible for administering this policy and related procedures.

Authority

This policy is issued under the authority of the members of the Editors' Association of Canada.

Substantive revisions to this policy must be authorized by a majority of the votes cast by members of the association at a general meeting.

This policy will be reviewed every five years.
